DMF launches Mayors’ Blue Ribbon Commission on Addiction to fight the opioid crisis

Faced with a dramatic rise in overdose deaths, community leaders unite to build a brilliant community-wide strategy to stop the epidemic in its tracks.

The group of community leaders assembled is dedicated to identifying ways to curb the growing problem of substance abuse. Bills for the improvements identified have been introduced by state legislators and are already in the toolboxes of Cass and Clay county leaders. A group of community members has been appointed by the Cass County Commission, and by the Clay County Commission.

The steering group includes government officials, law enforcement, healthcare leaders and policy makers. Panels of community experts provide information and background.

It’s like putting a one-thousand-piece puzzle together, with experts from a variety of backgrounds, working together.

While addiction is a problem facing communities across the state and nation, there is a movement to address the issue at a local level in Cass and Clay counties.

The group is working with nonprofits to provide resources and programs, including treatment plans and support services, to fight the addiction.

They are also working with local schools to provide education and prevention programs, including those targeting young people.

DMF has the income stream to support these efforts, and has seen positive results.

The group is expected to see continued success and investing in breakthrough innovation.

In our modern history, DMF has launched initiatives that have uplifted local families and neighbors struck by medical crisis. In that time, 400 local families have been supported.

“We have a shared community, we will not be deterred and we will continue to work together to lead破损 sections.”

DMF, a nonprofit organization, is committed to improving health, quality of life and access to healthcare in our region.

DMF’s work has been recognized with awards, and it has been named one of the top 100 philanthropic organizations in the United States.

DMF continues to explore paths for more profound impact.

In late 2015, The North Dakota Dental Foundation began a $130,000 grant from Thompson Hotels to support the Foundation’s Mission of Mercy event this past July. More offices have been added this year, with the intent of expanding to off-site locations like schools and long-term care facilities in coming years at locations around North Dakota. Concordia College to provide cleanings, fillings, and other care at no cost to North Dakota. DMF has been working with schools, including ones with dental schools, to bring back good models,” Anderson said. “I’ve been speaking to other organizations across the state and nationally and I see a movement happening, not just in our communities, but beyond it. Some of these are pushing the idea of having people who aren’t called dentists treat people, and that’s where we’ve been pushing for years at the Foundation.”
